WHEELING, SEPTEMBER 11, 1895.

Needless Quarantines All talk indulged in by neighboring towns about quarantining against Wheeling is the heighth of foolishness. There is no smallpox epidemic here, nor is there likely to be. The cases that exist are isolated and carefully guarded and the disease may be said to be under control. It is probable that there will be a few more cases directly traceable to those that now exist, but owing to the measures that are now being taken, and the fact that the situation is in competent hands and is being properly dealt with, there is no reason to apprehend an epidemic, or a spread of the contagion outside the present limits.

It seems that this statement is necessary because of the wild rumors current outside the city, for which excitable people inside are partly responsible. Some of these reports are so grossly exaggerated that their ridiculousness should be apparent to thoughtful people. For instance, one story is to the effect that there are as many as a hundred cases of small-pox in Wheeling and that the newspapers are suppress ing the truth. It is almost incredible that sane people will give ear and currency to so silly a report with the means they have at hand for ascertaining the

The authorities of our neighboring towns should not allow themselves to be misled by rumor into taking hasty action looking to the declaration of a quarantine. It is a very simple matter for them, before adopting such a measure, to send to Wheeling a committee of their own citizens, including a reputable physician or two, to confer with our health authorities, and make a personal investigation of the situation here, and to see for themselves that the rumors in circulation regarding an epidemic are false, and that the newspapars have been misrepresented. By doing this they will not only do full justice to this city, but avoid a resort to a very unnecessary, if not an absolutely ill-advised proceeding.

The actions already taken by com-munities surrounding Wheeling are due, no doubt, to exaggerated reports they have received regarding the prevalence of smallpox here, and quarantines have been declared without official inquiry of official sources into the real state of affairs. Neither the authorities of Wheeling nor the newspapers are interested in misrepresenting the health conditions of the city, and it is regretable that some of our neighbors have placed more reliance in wild-eyed street rumors than in the authoritative statements of those whose business it is to keep the public posted with facts. is absolutely no reason why Wheeling should be quarantined, as the situation here in no wise justifies such

THERE is a flavor of humor in the sitnation of two New York policemen who must stand trial on a charge of failing to report their own acts of bravery.

Campaign Boomerangs.

The Democrats of Ohio are beginning their campaign in a bad way for themselves. At the very start they circulated's story that General Bushnell, the Republican candidate for governor, recently reduced the wages of his employes. The report acted as a boomerang, for it enabled General Bushnell to not only show conclusively that he had not reduced wages, but that in some departments of his works he had increased them. It is also developed, as a result of the Democratic campaign lie, that General Bushnell is extremely popular among his workmen, and that they all have an enthusiastic love and respect for him, and are indignantly denonneing the absurd story which was calculated to injure him among the wage-workers of Ohio.

The incident recalls a similar occur once in Wheeling during last year's campaign, when the Democratic organ of this city sought by certain publications to weaken Senator Whitaker before the wage workers, the senator being a large employer of labor. Everybody remembers the result, and how the employes of the Whitaker mill, almost to a man, and regardless of polities, publicly expressed their indignation at the assault made upon their employer; how, after the election, in which he ran ahead of his ticket, these employes paraded the streets carrying banners on which were inscribed some very pointed comments on the effort that had been made to injure Mr. Whitaker's standing among workingmen. The Democratic organ and the Democratic managers found to their cost that they had thrown a very destructive

So it is in the case of General Boshnell in Ohio. The circumstances are almost similar, and all over Ohio the workingmen are testifying, in reply to the Democratic assaults on the Republican candidate for governor, to the esteem in which they hold him as an mployer of labor.

It is another instance of Democratic politicians presuming too far on the supposed credulity of workingmen, and, as usual, they have found to their cost that the men who toll in the mills and factories are not fools, and cannot be led by designing knaves.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND does not seem to be soucerning himself about the prospective fate of Boss Gorman. A little assistance just at this critical time would be greatly appreciated by the Marylander, but there is no welcome sound from the direction of Buzzard's

Quay and Cameron.

The statement that Senator Quay will not support Senator Cameron in his candidacy for re-election to the senate is important, if true. During Quay's recent campaign for the chairmanship it was boldly charged that he was allied with Cameron, who, it was said, was aiding him financially, and that the success of Quay in his fight for the chairmanship would mean a victory for the senior senator also.

Now, if reports are to be relied on, it appears that Mr. Quay is unpledged in the matter of the senatorship and has even gone so far as to say that if Cameron is returned it will be as the candidate of the combine which fought so hard for the defeat of the chairman.

This puts a new phase on the senstorial situation in Pennsylvania and is interesting as showing how it may win many friends to Quay, as a very considerable number of Republicans opposed him solely on the ground that he was thought to favor Cameron, whose political eccentricities have ruined him in the estimation of the best men of the party.

THERE are 11,000 more school children in Chicago than there are school accommodations for. It is said the population of Kentucky always keeps up with the distilleries down there, but Chicago's population can always be depended upon to not only keep up with her institutions but to overflow them. She grows too fast for her facilities.

A Noble Sentiment.

The following closing paragraph of a lengthy editorial, incident to the G. A. R. encampment at Louisville, is from the pen of Henry Watterson in the Courier Journal:

Journal:

Such a spectacle as we shall have in Louisville this week would, perhaps, be impossible in any other country. In the United States we are good fighters, but we are not long haters. We light out our differences and dismiss them. We are too busy, and, let us hope, too sensible and too partiotte, to keep alive the animostites of a day that has gone forever and ever by. The "late unpleasantness" was no child's play while it assied, but it was fought out to it logical result, and all classes are predared to accept it, and to discard the passions which it excited.
We have built up the was to places, have buried the past, and turn our deces resolutely to the four turn, with confidence in the great deatiny which our united efforts will create. When we look back to 1861, we cannot but wonder at the mysterious way along which a beneficen Providence has led a great noople through the havoe of war and fratriedal strife to peace, prosperity and fraternity.

When an American citizen can write thus but thirty years after the close of a terrible civil war, in which he himself took part, it is evidence enough that sectional bitterness is ended. The senfiment expressed in the above extract will strike a responsive chord in every true American heart.

THE New York Tribune "gets there with both feet" when it says that our Democratic friends are making the old mistake in thinking that the voters of the country are incompetent fools who will never know what hurts them when they are hurt. The voters do not need to study anything more elaborate than their own pocketbooks at the end of each week. If the Democratic policy pays for them, giving them better employment and wages in proportion to the cost of living than in 1892, they will remember the fact. If it does not, they will remember that fact also, They are perfectly competent to judge whether or not their wages are in preportion to the prices of the things they buy, the lower prices being almost wholly in farm products, of which decline workingmen do not get the full benefit in the retail prices.

SEVERAL newspapers, in chronicline the death of ex-Senator John F. Lewis. of Virginia, have stated that Mr. Lewis was the only member of the Virginia secession convention in 1801 who refused to sign the secession ordinance. This is not true, and shows a lamente ble disregard for the facts of history on the part of our contemporaries. There were at least fifteen members of the convention, principally representing Northwestern Virginia, now West Virginia, who not only refused to sign the ordinance, but withdrew from the convention and stood by the Union.

My Bowles, the treasury subordinate who assumed to set aside an act of Congress, is catching it from all sides. Some leading Democratic papers are quite as much disgusted as their Republican contemporaries, and are demanding Bowler's removal. It is not probable that the administration will comply with the demand, but that will not end the incident, Congress will have a whack at the little autocrat before long and the fun won't be all on Bowlor's side.

A DAY or so ago it was regarded as significant that the Defender, which won the first race in a light wind, was designed to be a strong wind beat. Yesterday's race was in a strong wind, but our hopes were blasted by an unlooked-for bit of jockeying, Still, it would be remarkable if the Valkyrie falled to win at least once during the series, and there is as yet no cause for uneasiness regarding the safety of the cup.
